NORMAL RESPONSES AND EXPERIENCES

A period of transition can be a very difficult time. Changes we have chosen, or some beyond our control often result in a variety of feelings.

There are also chemical changes in our body as we react to the changed circumstances.

Endorphines and adrenaline surges can have us on a roller coaster of emotions and feelings.

Having difficulty sleeping and eating. Your work may suffer and you may not be able to concentrate effectively.

You may experience a complex mix of emotions which can result in feeling confused about the situation.

This is normal —
we all react differently.

FEELINGS

You may experience

- * Sadness
- * Anger
- * Guilt
- * Disbelief
- * Self-doubt
- * Isolation and frustration
- * Relief
- * Emptiness

All of these emotions and others are quite common in this situation and are a NORMAL response to a difficult and dramatic lifestyle experience change.

It is wise to check with your doctor if you are concerned.

HELPFUL DO'S AND DON'T'S

Do remember that after a significant change accidents are very common. Drive carefully and take care at home.

Do send children back to school and keep their normal routines as closely as possible.

Do take time to sleep, rest, relax and do what you enjoy doing.

Don't make hasty decisions on major changes for at least a year e.g. selling your home.

Don't expect memories to go away — feelings remain for a long time.

WAYS OF HELPING OURSELVES

Firstly,..... Knowing that it's okay to have these feelings, you are not going crazy.

- ◆ Finding an outlet where we can be our true selves, letting the mask down and expressing our feelings.
- ◆ Talking to someone we trust.
- ◆ Writing about the situation.
- ◆ Hugs can help.
- ◆ Crying is okay.
